Lee:

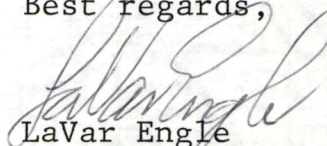

This letter is to clarify your question concerning our handling of the mining debris after it leaves our concentrators.

The water and materials fall into a catching bin with a conveyor belt bringing the solids out and up to the loading chute for the dump trucks. They are transported back to their original site for air drying.

The water is channeled back to the settling ponds. We realize that silt will settle out and we will periodically have to remove these silt deposits and deposit them back to the excavated areas.

We really appreciate the way you have worked with us and if we can help you in any way, let us know.

Best regards,

LaVar Engle
